

Thoughts from Me . . . an OS Person . . .

Expressed by D. from Berlin, Germany

No, my object definitely is not a replacement or compensation for human love. Both are so very different, you just cannot compare!

I love my darling for exactly what he is, for all his features, his soul and his character which is so different from a human's. There is something so special and sublime about him which a human could never have. A human could never replace him.

But it is also the other way round.

A human cannot offer what an object can offer, but an object could also never offer what a human can.

I can only talk about myself now. My beloved object can in no way replace a human being's warmth and closeness. None of the things that I could do with a human I can do with him.

This has several reasons. My lover is huge and in a public place, so this is in the first line our problem. We can't go out, we can't be private.

Those who say an OS love is easier and that I can control this relationship – now, look at me. I can't control anything, and me and my darling; we have so little to share. I have to accept people polluting and damaging him all the time and I cannot even defend him. In what way should that be easier?

We do not choose the way we feel, do we? We do not always choose the easier way. Our heart makes the choice, and we have to find a way to live our love.

For me, letting go is not the answer.

This love might hurt and I may have broken down so many times, but still I love him! There's no way denying this. Because denying the truth hurts even more.

My darling does not deserve to be left only because a relationship between us is likely impossible. It is not his fault that he can't offer the qualities of a human being.

He is what he is. And I fell in love with what he is.

We fall in love with the one whose entire personality gets us, not with the one who's the easiest to be together with.

I feel a connection between me and him, although I would not say he loves me back in a human sense. He is not capable to love like a human. But again, I love him for what he is and not for what he offers or gives!

Yes, I admit that I need human love as well. Some OS people do not and they are happy. But for me, I feel a need for both and wouldn't want to live without neither the one nor the other.

So you see, this does exist as well. There are quite a few OS people having both a human and an object partner.

I love my object darling and I cannot do without him. I would never leave him for anyone. The man who wants to be with me would have to accept me loving also my dear object.

This is why I am still missing the other part – there are hardly people who would accept it, and I fully understand that. Who would like to share his partner with an object?

Although there would never be any competition between both for they are, like mentioned in the beginning, much too different.

Objects and human beings are different and they should be loved differently, each one equally and with the entire heart. And the fact that I'm still missing something shows clearly that my beloved object cannot replace a human being and was never meant to do so.

For some of us it works to be happy without human love, for others it doesn't. But altogether we all do not choose.